As a workaround, you can build and deploy xap package (web or winforms). The xap package contains compiled assemblies, so you can run existing application with xap package. For more information please take a look at Xpand programming for version 12.1.x A: The general answer to this problem is "no", you cannot convert projects in build time, you have to convert them in runtime. The exception might be the following scenario: 1) you use DevExpress components 2) you need to use some piece of the components that has been released as a Source Code download 3) that Source Code download has been released AFTER the compile time for the release you use If you meet this scenario, you can try to use the DevExpressXtraSamples, they are included in the devx-samples package. Hope it helps... Game: Gray is Really Lasting Game: Gray Is Really Lasting is an EP by American singer-songwriter Michael Gray, released in 2008. Music and release The EP is a collection of five songs, all of them based in autobiographical events. "For a Minute" was the first song released as part of Game: Gray Is Really Lasting and was the first single released by Gray in his career, originally appearing on the 2005 CD-R of the same name. It marked a departure in the music of Gray, as it is entirely acoustic, also introducing a more stripped-down, jazz feel to the music of the singer. It was described by Heather Phares of Allmusic as "a pleasant, sparsely arranged" tribute to how a crush on a woman ended, with Gray wondering how all this "wildly mixed with the anguish and confusion" he felt over "the glaring separation of [his] world [being] so much starker than anything else". Phares also compared the song to the work of the Music Player to
